

Abstract: This paper proposes a new approach to modeling heterogeneity in choice data that can accommodate fixed-point ratings data and text. Respondent choices, survey responses and narratives are combined to form latent archetypes that provide an integrated description of respondents in terms of the objects and drivers of their wants. A unique conjoint dataset is used to illustrate the model where respondent needs and wants are integrated into a coherent story of demand.